

Why we made this film

2009 marks a double anniversary: Charles Darwin's 200th birthday and the 150th anniversary of the publication of his book, The Origin of Species. We wanted to capitalize on the publicity created by the "Year of Darwin" hype. Yet, we wanted to create something that made people think.

This film is not what you might expect from a Christian organization. This high-budget (over $1 million), high-definition, surround-sound production, with beautiful cinematography and musical score, historical reenactments, and interviews with leading PhD scientists, was created with the non-believer and questioning Christian in mind. We sought to treat Darwin fairly, giving him credit where it was due and questioning him when appropriate.

The goal of the film is not to give pat answers, but to raise questions—including the hard questions that many have stopped asking—and get people to think critically about the issues.

We interviewed a wide cross-section of scientists, historians and philosophers in our quest for understanding. The combined knowledge of this group paints an intriguing picture of an enigmatic man. What they said might surprise you, but you'll have to watch the film to find out!

The Voyage that Shook the World

Comments from renowned Christian film critic, Dr. Ted Baehr (MovieGuide.org)

"...this extremely well-crafted exploration of who Charles Darwin was and what he believed is one of the best-produced documentaries ever made."

"Not a hatchet job or propaganda piece..."

"...it may turn their hearts and minds away from the confusion that is Darwinism toward asking the right questions that can lead them to the truth."
